Apple buyers guide airpods pro release

We're expecting an iPad Pro 2022, even if Apple's Peek Performance event in March came and went with only a new iPad Air 5 making an appearance. Still, Apple has revised its premium tablet every year since it was introduced (excluding 2019). With last year's iPad Pro being one of the biggest updates ever, we're excited to see what Apple has in store for 2022. Rumors are currently few and far between. However, with a launch date possibly coming soon, we'll hopefully hear more about the new iPad Pro in the near future. Here's everything we know about the iPad Pro 2022 so far, as well as a wishlist on the off chance Apple is in a listening mood. iPad Pro 2022 design The 2022 iPad Pro range is, once again, expected to come in 11-inch and 12.9-inch sizes. But design changes appear to be afoot for the Pad Pro 2022, and we've heard of a couple so far. Like the rumored Samsung Galaxy Tab S8 Ultra and, indeed, the 2021 MacBook Pro, Apple could be adding a notch to the iPad Pro's design. However, a more recent report from 9to5Mac (opens in new tab) says that while Apple is considering this move, the decision is not set in stone. (Image credit: MyDrivers) Arguably a notch makes a bit more sense here than on the company's high-end laptops, as the iPad Pro uses FaceID for authentication, which makes for a sizable camera footprint. All the same, it's likely to prove unpopular even if adding a notch does result in even thinner bezels. The second design tweak we've heard talk of, via Bloomberg's Mark Gurman, is a glass back for the possible introduction of wireless charging. While this has long been a feature of Apple's non-SE iPhones, there's talk that this will go a step further with reverse-wireless charging, meaning it will be able to top up the battery of other devices such as your iPhone, Apple Watch or AirPods. That sounds like a further step on the rumored long-term goal for devices to charge each other over the air (though that's years away). Apple is rumored to be working on a ginormous 15-inch iPad to take on larger smart screens, and its display components partner BOE has adapted its factory to make 15-inch OLED displays, but this larger panel is said to be at least a couple of years away. But in the meantime, the iPad 2022 model could be getting a 14-inch version, says one leaker. As well as extra screen space, this model could come with more storage and RAM capacity by default, allowing for enhanced overall performance too. The rumors for OLED displays on the iPad Pro say they won't arrive until 2024. So it looks like we'll stick with an LCD 11-inch model and a mini LED 12.9-inch model like we got with the 2021 edition. iPad Pro 2022 specs Early tips from analyst Ming-Chi Kuo as well as a tip from a regular leaker pointed to the smaller 11-inch iPad Pro tablet adopting mini-LED screen tech this time around. The feature isn't entirely new, having debuted in 2021, but it was exclusive to the 12.9-inch models, which cost significantly more. This will hopefully allow more buyers to enjoy the deeper blacks and higher brightness that independently lit pixels provide. However, Kuo has backed off that claim as of late, and now display analyst Ross Young says an 11-inch iPad Pro with mini-LED is unlikely. Apparently, the 12.9-inch model is doing well enough to where Apple will likely want to keep that feature exclusive to its most expensive tablet. A separate report from 9to5Mac (opens in new tab) says that the iPad Pro could be powered by Apple's upcoming M2 chip. The Apple M2 chip was announced at WWDC 2022 and appears in both the MacBook Air 2022 and entry-level MacBook Pro 2022. However we may even see an M2 Pro version of the iPad Pro according to analyst Jeff Pu's claims of Apple's new 3-nanometre chip getting used in an iPad later this year. As for cameras, the same 9to5Mac report says that the iPad Pro 2022 could feature a similar camera setup to the iPhone 13, which would give it impressive image quality along with features like Cinematic mode for video. We've also heard the next iPad Pro may ship with support for wireless charging, which would be a welcome upgrade. (Image credit: MyDrivers) Currently, the iPad Pro 2022 has been tipped for a fall release, according to reliable tipster and Bloomberg journalist Mark Gurman. This would make sense as previous iPad Pro models have been revealed and released during the fall months. As for the iPad Pro 2022 price, you can expect another premium product — and we imagine that the 11-inch model will get at least the same $100 price hike as the 12.9-inch one did last year, if the rumored mini-LED display is introduced. That would make the tablet start at $899 for the 11-inch model and $1,099 for the 12.9-inch version. That, of course, is just the entry-level price, with the cost currently rising all the way to $2,199 if you want a 2TB 12.9-inch model with 5G connectivity. Can't wait? Then the 2020 iPad Pro also makes for a good refurbished tech purchase, and will save you a good bit of cash. It's also worth browsing our Apple Store coupons page to find the latest discounts on products. iPad Pro 2022: What we'd like to see To be perfectly honest, the iPad Pro is already an excellent product and we're hard pushed to name any serious weaknesses that need urgent improvement. Nonetheless, we do have a modest wishlist. To be clear, the 2021 iPad Pro has perfectly respectable battery life, but it's noticeable that the 12.9-inch model "only" managed ten hours and 48 minutes in our web browsing test, while the 11-inch version achieved 13:42. If that's a sign that the mini-LED screen is more power hungry than the IPS panel and both are indeed adopting the former this time around, then hopefully there will be larger cells to compensate. The iPad Pro currently comes in two colors: space grey and silver, so not a great deal of choice there. Recently, Apple has been experimenting with a wider range of colors for both the iPhone 13 and 24-inch iMac, and it would be nice if consumers had the option for a more colorful iPad Pro too. Okay, this is getting into seriously unlikely territory at this point, but the iPad Pro is at its best when accompanied by two first-party accessories: the Apple Pencil for doodling and the Smart Keyboard to make it into a surrogate laptop. Given the amount Apple makes from selling these optional accessories separately, it's unlikely to change any time soon, but we can dream... Source: Apple After one weekend of pre-orders, the M2 MacBook Pro remains in plentiful supply on Apple's website, possibly indicating a lack of demand for a device overshadowed by the looming new MacBook Air. Pre-orders for the new M2 MacBook Pro kicked off early on Friday, but an early glitch on Apple's website saw that only the two base-spec configurations with 8GB of RAM were available to order. While delivery times did start to slip later that day, four days after launch stock for the device has stabilized and only one type of M2 MacBook Pro (2022) is hard to get hold of. Our research conducted on Apple's website shows that all but the 24GB unified memory option for the new MacBook Pro are readily available. The base spec 8GB version with 256GB of storage is still available to order with a launch day shipping date of June 23. Another other 8GB version with expanded storage of 512GB, 1TB, or 2TB of SSD storage will ship in just 4-6 business days, possibly again on the release date of June 23. Likewise, the 16GB version of all of these storage configurations has the same paltry 4-6 wait time. As noted, only the 24GB version is proving harder to get hold of, with shipping of the best MacBook Pro configuration available sat at a steady 5-6 weeks. The new 24GB unified memory option is a new feature of Apple's all-new M2 processor and a distinguishing feature over the old 13-inch MacBook Pro with M1. The M2 offers users an improvement of some 20% in performance over the old one, more if you examine graphics performance. Unpopular demand? It seems then that demand for the new MacBook Pro, on the whole, seems to be muted, possibly because the device is overshadowed somewhat by the new M2 MacBook Air which is set to debut next month. The Air has the same processor (albeit with 8 GPU cores instead of 10 as standard), unified memory, storage, improved display, and a better FaceTime HD camera. The only reason it seems that one might choose the Pro over the Air is the improved battery life, active cooling of the M2 chip, and the aforementioned boost to the GPU on the lower-spec models. You can get a 10-core GPU in your MacBook Air, but it's a pricier optional extra. Another major difference is the Touch Bar, which doesn't get much love from Apple these days but could be a deal-breaker (or maker) for some. The Pro also ships as standard with a more powerful USB-C charger, however, that same charger when added to the Air supplies fast charging which is good for 50% battery in just 30 minutes. The good news out of all this is that the new MacBook Pro is probably the perfect device for someone out there, possibly for those who need a bit more juice but can't justify buying the MacBook Pro (2021). If you find yourself in that category, then the new M2 MacBook Pro is readily available for pre-order as we speak. The newest and best The 13-inch MacBook Pro now features the M2 chip but remains otherwise unchanged from the previous M1 model. We may earn a commission for purchases using our links. Learn more.
